Your access to the University's computing facilities and networks is granted subject to local, state, federal laws and University Judicial Code. These guidelines are designed to promote legal, ethical, and academic honesty, and encourages restraint in the consumption of shared resources. Adherence to these guidelines demonstrates respect for the laws of intellectual property, ownership of data, system security mechanisms, and for an individual's rights to privacy and freedom from intimidation, harassment, and unwarranted annoyance.

The University of Bridgeport expects you to exercise responsible, ethical behavior according to these guidelines when using its computing facilities. Access to the University Computer resources is granted as long as these guidelines are followed. By connecting and or logging on to the University computers and networks the user agrees to the terms and conditions of these Acceptable User Guidelines as outlined below.

Password and Accounts

You are responsible for all usage of your account. Protect your password. Do not tell it or show it to anyone, including family members, friends or acquaintances. Properly log out of the system when you finish. Your account is for your personal use only.

Do not use another person's account regardless of how access to the account is obtained.

Commercial Use of University Resources

Your account is intended for the pursuit of your educational goals. You may not use the University of Bridgeport's computer resources to solicit sales, conduct business or advertise or sell a service. This also applies to the use of any University resources through you personal computers.

Copyright Laws

You may not copy or attempt to modify any University owned software, except as permitted by the University. Any receipt, transmission, use or destruction of software or data must observe US copyright laws, and license restrictions.

Altering or destroying any document or file of which you are not the owner is a violation of these guidelines.

Misuse of the Network Systems

Connecting a personal computer or device to the University owned network and computers must be authorized by the University of Bridgeport's Information Technology Department.

You may not engage in activities which damage or disrupt hardware, software, or communications, such as virus creation and propagation, and overloading the network with excessive data.

You may not monopolize, misuse or waste the system resources by, for example, requesting multiple copies from printers or by playing games in the labs.

You may not forge or otherwise misrepresent another's identity through any form of communication

You may not attempt to circumvent protection mechanisms or exercise security procedures in any computer or network component.

You may not transmit or make accessible offensive, annoying, or harassing material, such as broadcasting unsolicited messages or sending unwanted mail.

You may not intentionally access or damage systems or information that is not yours, such as University records, or use any system for illegal activities.

You may not use information bases, whether open or protected to derive or generate mailing lists, either for your personal use or for anyone else.

The University seeks to protect the civil, personal, and property rights of those who use its computing resources as well as those whose student or employment records are maintained on its computing systems. Any unlawful attempt to access these resources is a serious offense.

Disclaimers

The University is not responsible for any loss of data, damage to the hardware or software on your personal systems at home or in the Residential Halls.

The University of Bridgeport believes in the user's rights to privacy, however when there is sufficient evidence of wrong doings, the University reserves the right to examine and impound any files, information or computer systems resident or attached to its networks

Conduct which involves the use of the University resources in an inappropriate manner or which violates another person's rights may result in revocation of computing usage privileges and is subject to University disciplinary action as outlined in the University's Policies and Judicial Code. Such conduct may also be subject to criminal or civil legal action.

Note: All Rules and Regulations are subject to change without prior notice. The University of Bridgeport reserves the right to make any changes as deemed necessary.
